MARKET OVERVIEW

Canada's housing market is making a steady recovery

Canada's home prices rise across most of the country. This brought the average home price to $729,044 in May 2023, an increase of 2% from last month and the highest that it has been since April 2022. The major housing markets of Ontario saw a similar 2% monthly increase in prices.

Since March 2022, multiple Bank of Canada rate hikes have caused Canadian mortgage rates to rise, tempering housing demand. However, strong population growth and income growth might explain why demand has remained so strong in the face of such high-interest rates. Demand is also influenced by expectations about future prices – if you expect prices to keep increasing, you are willing to pay more today. In addition, price increases are the result of housing supply shortages as well.
